The committee recommends that the government provide them with assistance in the form of food, clothing, and medical care. The report also notes that the Chippewa Indians have been displaced from their traditional lands and have been forced to live in unhealthful conditions.

The Senate passed the bill without amendment, and it was presented to the President for his signature. The President signed the bill on July 1, 1868, and it became law.

The committee concluded that the Chippewa Indians are a peaceable and industrious people who are entitled to the protection of the law.
